As many as 334 million people are believed to have asthma, 387 million people are estimated to be living with diabetes, and the number of patients having to undergo replacement surgeries – for parts ranging from knees to hips to even entire bone structures – is also rising. The treatment of these illnesses is becoming increasingly sophisticated and is no longer conceivable without plastic. Special medical grade polymers are used in asthma inhalers and insulin pens, and biocompatible yet artificial materials pick up the slack when the body's own are failing. Not only is plastic increasingly used inside the human body, polymer processing technologies are also paving the way for breakthroughs in medicine, including the 3D printing of organic tissue.

Disease is by its very nature unpredictable, and impacts people all over the world. This is the main reason why the field of medical plastics holds so much promise – people will continue getting sick, and science will continue to come up with new cures. Interest in medical-grade polymers has never been greater, at least that was the impression gained at CHINAPLAS 2015, during which a special conference on “Medical Plastics” was held. Following the immensely positive audience feedback, CHINAPLAS fair organiser Adsale and KI Group have decided to host another Medical Plastics Conference at CHINAPLAS 2016, held from 25-28 April in Shanghai.

With focus on plastics and rubber technologies, this exclusive two half-day conference will present some of the latest developments in medical grade polymer and manufacturing know how for medical devices, disposable and pharmaceutical packaging. The conference will be an ideal opportunity for companies to demonstrate their latest technologies in the medical sector to an international audience.

To pay homage to this innovative field, next year's event will be even bigger. In addition to expert presentations, the current plans call for a special exhibition area, where companies can showcase their latest medical innovations, technologies and materials – allowing fair visitors to see, touch and feel them.

We are currently accepting papers, exhibit suggestions and sponsorship requests for the conference. Interested parties should contact:
